ANNOUNCEMENT

GambleAware makes changes to Board and committee structure

London, 22 June: Following a review of its governance arrangements, GambleAware's trustees have agreed to establish a set term for trusteeship and to re-organise its committee structure. Trustees will serve no more than two terms of three years. In the light of this decision, the charity's two longest-serving trustees, Clive Hawkswood and Nick Harding, have stepped down reducing the total number of trustees to eleven.

GambleAware has renewed the terms of reference for its Research & Evaluation Committee and established a new Education & Treatment Committee. Both of these committees involve trustees and observers from the Government, the Gambling Commission and the Responsible Gambling Strategy Board, and independent expertise as necessary. A new Industry Engagement Committee will focus on ensuring GambleAware maintains positive engagement with the industry in relation to fundraising and funding research, education and treatment.

Kate Lampard, GambleAware's Chair of Trustees says: "We are all very grateful for the advice, support and industry expertise that both Clive and Nick have provided to GambleAware over so many years. On behalf of all concerned, I thank them for giving up so much of their time to help GambleAware meet its charitable objectives. I am pleased that both have agreed to continue to participate in our renewed efforts to engage positively with the industry and improve understanding of the research, education and treatment that GambleAware funds."
